

HR tech's influence on today's health benefits

Keep employees feeling safer and healthier with quick access to medical advice, mental health resources and COVID-19 testing

The way we work has evolved rapidly in the past year, and it's opened doors for new technologies to help keep employees safe and healthy. Your people are your top priority — you have choices to help take care of them.

Now you can help maintain workers' health and increase productivity, today and in the long term, by offering safe and quick access to medical appointments, mental health counseling and COVID-19 testing.

How today's HR and health-care technology can help

At-home virus testing

Get tested quickly without leaving the house.

No wait times

Save time traveling to and waiting for appointments.

Keep others safe

Talk to a doctor remotely instead of going out while sick.

Get care quickly

Book appointments on your own schedule.

Affordable for employees

Offer telemedicine benefits with no copays and no insurance needed.

Manage ongoing health needs

Get prescriptions, standard checkups and more.

Poor health costs U.S. employers

$530 billion

annually, between wages and benefits, workers' compensation, performance and opportunity costs of absence.¹

79%

of employees who used virtual health services in 2020 say their visits were equally as good as in-person care.²

44%

of employees surveyed have deferred medical care during the pandemic.²

65%

of employees report that mental health issues have directly impacted their work during the COVID-19 pandemic.³

Telehealth benefits cited by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention include⁴

- Expanding access to care.
- Reducing disease exposure for staff and patients.
- Preserving personal protective equipment supplies.
- Reducing patient demand on facilities.
